EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE first edition of this Dictionary appeared, under my editorship, in 1904. The stereotype plates of that edition having been destroyed in the Dublin fires in 1916, the preparation of the present edition began the following year.

In this, the second edition, a page equal in capacity to about $1\frac{2}{5}$ pages of the first edition, has been employed, and the total number of pages amounts to 1372 as against some 820 pages of the first edition. By this means and by compression and word-grouping space has been found for about $2\frac{1}{2}$ times the amount of matter contained in the first edition.

As a complete re-casting of the book did not appear advisable, it seemed the safest, as well as the best, plan to follow in a general way the style and arrangement of the original work to which the public had grown accustomed and which had met with wide approval. The present edition is, however, practically a new work.

Though the scope and size of the book as well as the scattered and fragmentary character of much of the material precluded exhaustiveness, an effort has been made to net the chief living elements of the language while there was still time. The materials for the work have been drawn from the living language of Irish-speaking Ireland as well as from the written remains of the modern literature.

Early modern Irish has come in for an extra amount of attention, and occasional incursions have been made into still earlier strata of the language when it seemed profitable to do so, e.g., for the completion of word-series. Recently-minted words and forms, however, have been but sparingly admitted; though homage is paid, where possible, to the growth of the language as revealed in current literature.

The first edition was, to a considerable extent, compiled from memory. A large percentage of the illustrative phrases were taken from living expressions, conversations, etc., stored up in my childhood's memory; so that many of them have the vividness and directness characteristic of the spoken word. In this edition still further use has been made of this source; and the meanings and applications of key words, somatic terms, and other important expressions have been considerably expanded. In all such expansions Mr. Gogan's research ably supplemented my own efforts.

bacach, -í, but áilgeach, -aċa (-aiġe) or -aí as also áilcea. A final convention in regard to the spelling of participles, n- groups, slender r- groups and final double consonants is, however, somewhat difficult to arrive at. Words like bádhadh, feárrdha, &c. have been accented throughout, although the double consonant seems a sufficient indication of the nature of the vowel sound. Triphthongs and the diphthong eo are not accented; eó (glide and ó) in the latter case being the usual pronunciation, the only exceptions being deoċ, leoghaim, reo and one or two other words.

Irish, especially Irish poetry, is rich in compound words. The compounds are in fact composed ad libitum, even in everyday speech. In the early parts of the book compounds are usually given as separate words. From, say, O onwards they are as a rule grouped, especially where they occur in large numbers. The method of registry in this case also varies. Usually they are alphabetically arranged; sometimes they are classified (see neamh-). It has been, however, difficult to recognise a principle in regard to the palatalisation of the first element of the compound. Palatalised and non-palatalised forms are common in good texts and in local usage; and writers may often find it convenient to give both elements without change, as mí-náire for mío-náire, leaċt-creáil for leiċt-creáil, &c.

In Irish, as in other inflectional languages, there is a tendency to generalise oblique forms, e.g. cis or coigh for ceaċ, feilb for fealb; in large tracts of Connemara it is now usual to say coir, muic, láimh, &c. for cor, muc, lámh, &c. In the dictionary, however, the normal form is the one usually given.

In the presence of conflicting literations the selected form has been based on etymological data where available (thus: bir from English vice rather than bidir, and giúr or giuir rather than giumhair, the first mentioned occurring in the "Táin"), and otherwise on simplicity of form or on general usage. On the other hand, no reasonable objection can be raised against the passing into general use of such forms as gnár, clár, &c. Such reductions are well within the limits of simplification and development inherent in the language itself. Such exceptions are, in the main, rare. Isolated cases, e.g. cránaire for corránaire are common but do not merit permanent recognition.

In the large assortment of material here presented there are, naturally, uncertain elements on which the last word has by no means been said. For several reasons, among which is the disappearance of the neuter gender from the modern language, the gender of certain Irish substantives varies between masculine and feminine both in spoken and written usage. In these pages the solution of such problems, which the available evidence seemed to warrant, has been given. The etymological conjectures, which have been sparingly inserted, will, it is hoped, have the effect of stimulating inquiry into doubtful matters.

It should be observed that words or phrases to which a district has been assigned are not necessarily confined to that district, and that words, etc., assigned to a province or wide area are not necessarily co-extensive in use with these areas.

It is believed that the connotations generally, and especially those of the more important and fundamental words, are as full and as fully illustrated by examples as it is desirable to make them in a work like this.

Besides the numerous tales, tracts, poems, etc., that have been explored in the preparation of this work, it has been computed that more than 300 vocabularies, earlier and modern, printed and in manuscript, have been searched for the greater part of the book.

An effort has been made to secure as much representative provincial Irish in word and phrase as possible. Dr. Myles Dillon, Mr. O'Donnell of Newport, and many others, have supplied useful gleanings of Connaught (North and South) and Aran words and phrases. I have myself been constantly conversing with Irish-speaking emigrants from Connaught of whom a steady stream is constantly visiting Dublin. Moreover Mr. Gogan, by conviction, is partial to certain Connaught word-forms. Several distinguished Ulstermen, natives of North- and Mid-Ulster, have by their contributions helped to insure an adequate representation for the Northern dialect. Nor have the dialects of Meath, Omeath, or the Glens of Antrim been neglected. The Irish of the Comeragh district of Waterford has been well explored by Fr. McGrath and Mr. Weldon; and Dr. Sheehan's "Seán-Caint na n'Déise" has done much for the Decies generally. A host of able collectors have all but exhausted West- and North-West Kerry Irish (mainland and insular) and in this connection Fr. Clune's "Réiltíní Óir" deserves mention. The Ballyvourney "Four Masters," whose names are given elsewhere, together with Canon O'Leary and others, well represent the Irish of Muskerry or Mid-Cork. South and South-West Cork and Kerry are also well to the front. The Irish of Clare and West Limerick has several exponents. Even from those counties and districts in which the tide of Irish has ebbed words and phrases have been obtained. It will thus appear that no corner of Ireland has been left unexplored, though it is not pretended that nothing has been left for other workers to glean; rather should it be understood that the dictionary will be a convenient starting point for future gleaners in the fields of words, phrases and folk-lore in Irish. Care has been taken, however, not to accentuate the undoubted dialectic differences that exist and for which stress and intonation largely account. Omissions and errors which readers may notice will be gratefully received by the Editor.

The advice and extensive learning of Mr. L. S. Gogan, M.A., N.U.I., Assistant Keeper, Irish Antiquities, National Museum, were available during the greater part of the preparation of the work; but more especially during the last four or five years has he laboured with unflagging energy and zeal in the work of revision, transcription, arrangement and research to an extent impossible to my single effort. He came to my aid when the pressure of the work was at its height and when the mass of material by its very extent threatened to prove unmanageable by a single worker, and his ardour has proved inextinguishable; and not I alone, but the wide circle for whom this book is intended, owe him a debt of gratitude for his sustained patriotic effort.

The Rev. Denis O'Flynn, B.A., N.U.I., of the Archdiocese of Dublin, rendered valuable aid in proof-reading and in other directions, devoting to the work with patriotic zeal for three or four years whatever time and energy he could spare from his ecclesiastical studies. Miss Eileen Harnett, M.A., N.U.I., of the French Faculty of the National University, gave much assistance in the work of compilation in its earlier stages. Some assistance was also given with good will by Very Rev. P. Woulfe, P.P., and Mr. Séamas O Casaide, M.A. Special thanks are hereby tendered to Mrs. Máire Gogan, Miss Cecilia Geoghegan, Miss Louise O'Flynn, Miss Kathleen Goodfellow, for assistance, generously given, in various directions.

I am also under obligation to the kind and courteous staffs of the National Library of Ireland, and the National Museum.

During the progress of the work many useful suggestions from the Council of the Irish Texts Society, on whom, as on myself, the work has been a heavy burthen, reached me through their Honorary Secretary, Mr. T. D. FitzGerald, for which I am deeply grateful.

Finally, I gladly bear testimony to the ability and insight with which the excellent staff of Messrs. Sealy, Bryers and Walker, the printers, handled the work throughout.

I am grateful to the following for special interest taken in the book:—Rev. Lawrence Murray (Archdiocese of Armagh); Cú Uladh (Mr. Peter McGinley); Mr. Henry Morris; Aoidhmín Mac Sheághóin; Mr. Delargey; Mr. J. J. Buckley (Acting Director, National Museum, Dublin); Dr. Myles Dillon; Mr. MacDonald (South Africa); Micheál Ó Briain; Conchubhar Ó Dearmúna; Micheál Ó Loingsigh; Tadhg Ó Rioghbhardáin; Seán Mac Murchadha Caomhánach. Prof. T. O Máille, University College, Galway, kindly lent me proofs of his interesting work "Urlabhraidheacht." Fr. Denis O'Flynn, besides furnishing me with word-lists, kindly drew my attention to Fr. O'Growney's annotated "O'Reilly's Dictionary" in Maynooth College.

As regards deceased contributors I wish to make special and grateful mention of Dr. E. C. Quiggin, Fr. McGrath, Mr. Robert Weldon, Mr. P. Ferriter, and Mr. J. C. Ward.

Lists of words, phrases, etc., of varying scope and extent were obtained from:—His Ex. T. M. Healy; Right Rev. Abbot of Mount Melleray; Very Rev. Canon Breen, Killarney; Very Rev. Canon MacDermott, P.P. (Diocese of Elphin); Rev. Fr. Courtney (Kerry); Mr. James Fenton; Mr. Michael Breen, Castleknock (North-East Kerry words); Mr. Justice Forde (chiefly ornithological words); Dr. Douglas Hyde; Prof. T. F. O'Rahilly; Dr. John P. Mac Enri; Mr. Charles MacNeill; Peadar Ó Duibhdá (chiefly Omeath and Mid-Ulster words); Séamas Ó Súilleabháin (South Kerry); Mr. Thomas Forde, Dublin (words from the Tuam—Claregalway district); Rev. Fr. Cussen, O.P., M.A.; Mr. P. Mac Sweeney (Waterford words); Tomás Ó Conceanainn; Mr. P. O'Donnell, Newport, Co. Mayo; Eoghan Ó Neachtain; Mr. John Hogan, Inchicore (embodying extracts from MS. remains of the late Mr. John Glynn of Tuam); Miss Geraldine Griffin (words kindly selected by her from current journals and magazines); Mr. Honan, Bray (Clare words); Mr. M. McEnry (Mayo words); Pádraic Ó Dómhnaillán (late editor "Fáinne an Lae"); Dómhnall Ó Sgianna; Mr. J. J. Doyle; Mr. Denis Dinneen; Mr. J. J. Farrelly.

From the above list no name not given in the list of References has been advertently omitted.

Use has also been made of some of the lists obtained in the prize competition instituted by the Council of the Irish Texts Society some years ago. The Gaelic League Oireachtas tales, etc., were not available for use except to a limited extent.

This will in all likelihood be my last work for the Irish Texts Society. In this respect I may consider myself as "donatum jam rude." I sometimes think of that Society as a distinctive university unchartered and unendowed, in which, though unworthy, I have been filling a "Chair" since the year 1900 when they published my editio princeps of O'Rahilly, in which I had kind assistance from Prof. Bergin. That work was followed by the first edition of this dictionary (1904); by Vols. II. and III. (the late Mr. Comyn having edited Vol. I.) of Keating's History (1908); by a Smaller Irish-English Dictionary (1910); by a revised edition of O'Rahilly, edited in conjunction with Prof. O'Donoghue (1911); and by Vol. IV. of Keating's History (1914), and the present work (1927). On these volumes, eight in all, I reckon that, led by the lure and prompted by the pathos of unfinished or undeveloped undertakings, I have expended twenty years of severe labour, ten continuous years of which have been devoted to the present volume, and fourteen in all to lexicographical work. The holder of a "Chair" is expected not only to produce work useful to the public but also to stimulate alumni to follow up or surpass his efforts:

Ignem cujus scintillam ipse dedisti
Flagrantem late et rapientem cuncta videbis.

In this I have been favoured. The volumes in question have certainly been widely used. And to name only Prof. O'Donoghue, Mr. J. H. Lloyd, and Mr. J. J. O'Kelly among my earlier helpers, I can now point to Mr. Gogan and Fr. O'Flynn whose ability and enthusiasm in the cause of Irish learning are capable of scaling heights entirely beyond my reach.

It is pleasant to observe that my old friends, Miss Eleanor Hull, as Secretary to the Council, and Dr. Hyde, as President of the Irish Texts Society, are still at their posts, as in 1900, when my "O'Rahilly" appeared.

AIDS TO PRONUNCIATION.*

In the tables which follow an effort has been made to represent the sounds of Irish letters and combinations of letters in terms of English sounds, as English is spoken generally in Ireland. Of course perfect equivalence is not always attained. Thus broad l as in lá is more guttural than l in law and closely resembles ll as in hollow.

Slender r as in cuir is not found in English except, perhaps, in a word like Bert(ie) (in Irish-English).

To speak generally, the difference between broad and slender consonants is a strong characteristic of Irish speech.

The diphthongs and triphthongs in Irish are, in several instances, not paralleled in English.

In parts of Connaught, especially the neighbourhood of Achill and North Mayo, the sound of d slender approaches that of dg as in judge; thus cuid is pronounced something like cuidge.

Similarly t slender, cf. teaghaisc pronounced chaggasc.

The d sound in deil, in Galway and South Mayo, is like d in due, dew, as generally pronounced in Ireland, and differs from the sound of d in din which represents the Munster d slender and from the N. Mayo sound of d slender which is like dg in judge.

Similarly ae, ao, have variations of sound in Munster, Connaught and Ulster.

Aspirated Letters.

ḃ broad as in ᴀ ḃun, like w in way; sometimes, esp. after liquids, like ú or v as béalḃaċ, ceaṙṙḃaċ (pron. cearrúch).
ḃ slender as in ᴄṙeiḃ, like v in vain.
ċ as in ṙliuċ, like ch in loch (Irish pron.); final ċ slender pron. like h as in ᴅeiċ (pron. deh), al. sometimes between vowels as ṙliċe pron. flihi.
ḋ initial like y in yore and in M. often resembling gh.
ḋ final like w, or v or oo, or silent, sometimes like g in beg.
ḋ in body of word is oft. pronounced like ᴝ as in maoṁḋa.
ḟ silent but sometimes like h as in mé ḟéin.
ġ initial like y in yore, and in M. often resembling gh.
ġ final like w or v or oo, or silent; sometimes like g in beg; it resembles v in ᴅo ṫoiġ ṙé (ṫoiḃ), ᴝc.
ṁ broad like w as ṁaoin pronounced ween.
ṁ slender like v in vine as ᴀn ċṙeiṫiṁ (gs.).
ṗ like ṙ.
ṙ like h or ċ slender as in leaḃaṙ Seaᴎn (M. local), ᴅo ṙiuḃalṙainn, but leaḃaṙ Séamaiṙ, has S = H.
ṡ like h.

ṫ initial broad as in ᴀ ṫuine, like y in young and oft. resembling gh.
ᴝ initial slender same as ṫ initial slender.
ᴝ initial broad as in ᴀ ᴝaoltᴀ, same as ṫ initial broad.

Eclipsed Letters.

b is eclipsed by m as nᴀ mḃᴀn;
c is eclipsed by ᴝ as nᴀ ᴝcuaċ;
ᴅ is eclipsed by n as nᴀ nᴅáin;
ṙ is eclipsed by ḃ as nᴀ ḃṙeaṙ;
ᴝ is eclipsed by n as nᴀ nᴝṁáṙ;
ṗ is eclipsed by b as nᴀ bṗiᴀn;
ᴄ is eclipsed by ᴅ as nᴀ ᴅᴄonn.

Only the eclipsing letter is pronounced except in the case of nᴝ which is sounded somewhat like ng in thing, song, etc.

Difficult sounds of letters and combinations of letters.—These include ᴅ and ṙ slender, t and n broad, ᴄ broad and slender already dealt with.

ᴀ and o before m, nn, ll, or nᴝ, esp. in monosyllables and often before nᴄ and nc are sounded in M. like ou in round; also o before ḋ and ṡ; but this pronunciation does not hold when the m, nn, ᴝc., are followed immediately by a vowel, thus lom (llowm), but lomᴀḋ (lloma).
ᴀḋ and ᴀġ are sounded generally like i in lime; cf. ᴀġaiḋ, ṗaḋᴀṁc, maiṫm.
ᴀḋ terminating a verbal is pron. generally ᴀ, sometimes oo.
ᴀḋ in perf. passive is pronounced variously as uᴝ or ᴀᴝ, uv or uw, oo, uch, as (ᴅo) lomᴀḋ (é) pronounced llomug or llomag, llomuv, llomuw, llomoo, llomuch (stress always on penult.). These variations, or most of them, are found within comparatively small areas; M. however favours uᴝ or ᴀᴝ and Con. uw, uv.
ᴀḋ termination of 3rd sing. imperfect act. is pron. ᴀċ, uċ (ach, uch) M., uw (Con., etc.).
ᴅl is sounded like ll as in coᴅlaḋ, ṗóᴅla.
ln is sounded like ll as colnᴀ pronounced colla.
ᴅn is sounded as nn as céaᴅnᴀ pronounced céannᴀ (cianna M.).

Two liquids or a liquid and a mute generally do not coalesce as ᵭeaɲʒ pronounced ᵭeaɾaʒ ; ɾealb pronounced ɾealaḃ.

Final e following an unaspirated consonant is always pronounced.

Such words as cɲoıᵭe are monosyllables, but the archaic pronunciation as two syllables is maintained in syllabic verse.

Stress and intonation account for a good deal of the differences between the three main dialects of Irish. Thus aɲán is stressed on the final syllable in M. ; in Con. the stress is on the first syllable but the second remains long ; in U. the stress is on the first syllable and the second is gnly. short.

Words like maɲcaċ, bacaċ have the stress on the final syllable in M., but in the gs. maɲcaıʒ, bacaıʒ the stress is shifted to the first syllable.

The obscurity of sound of short vowels is to be noted, thus ɾcéalca so far as sound goes might be written ɾcéalcu, ɾcéalco ; similarly cuɲuɾ, cuɲaɾ, cuɲoɾ.

to and ea are pron. identically in unstressed syllables of words of more than one syllable.

The lists given below will help the student by fixing more or less accurately the values of Irish letters and combinations of letters.

(1) The following Irish words have English words of the same sound but of different meaning placed opposite to them. In some cases the equivalence of sound is absolute, as bím = beam ; in other cases there is a slight discrepancy arising chiefly from the quality of the consonants but sometimes from the quality of the vowels:—

mac	mock	mear	mass
ar	ass, as(p)	lear	lass

After nouns the genitive singular and nominative plural are given; other cases, as required; after verbs (which are given in the 1st person singular, indicative mood), the verbal is given; after adjectives, the genitive singular feminine, which is in general the same as the comparative and superlative; many adjectives, from the nature of the case, are not used in the comparative or superlative, but are nevertheless declined in the positive degree; after compound nouns, the genitive and plural endings are not given when they are identical with those of the terminal simple nouns, and compound adjectives are not in general declined.

The general rule followed in setting down the inflectional termination after words is to repeat the last letter of the invariable portion of the word, thus bronntóir, -óra, -óirí, signifies that the genitive case of bronntóir is bronntóra, and its nominative plural is bronntóirí; where, however, the inflexional termination is purely an addition to the noun, the last letter is generally not repeated, thus fuath, -a, signifies that fuatha is the genitive case of fuath. The slight deviations from this method which occasionally occur will be readily understood.

Aon, g. aoin, m., an aeon, an age.

Aon, indef. prn., one, a single one, only, the only (oft. with aṁáin); the one, the same, any; with neg. no, none, not any; aon is ṗiċe, aon an ṗiċid, twenty-one; aon duine, aon neaċ, any one, anybody; with neg., no one, nobody; aon ... eile, another; aon lá aṁáin, one day, once upon a time; aon ní ḋ, anything, with neg., nothing; aon uair, aon uair aṁáin, once, once upon a time; an aon, together, both, all; mar aon le, along with, together with; gaċ aon, gaċ n-aon, every one. Aon is sometimes stressed, and forms one word with the following nouns, as: bíomar araon an aon-ṡcoil, we both attended the same school; d'aon-ġuṫ, unanimously;

but it is not stressed in phrases like ní hᴀon ṁᴀiṫeᴀṛ ᴅuiᴄ ᴅeiṫ ᴀg cᴀinnᴄ, there is no use in your talk; ní'l ᴀgᴀm ᴀċᴄ ᴀon ꞅᴄilling ᴀṁáin, I have but a single shilling, and should then be regarded as a separate word. The accentuation of ᴀon takes place when emphasis is to be laid on the singleness, unity, or identity of the idea conveyed by the following word: thus, ní'l ᴀon ᴅṁíġ leiṛ ᴀn ᴅṁocᴀl ꞅᴀin, that word has no meaning, but ᴀoin-ᴅṁíġ iṛ eᴀᴅ ᴀn ᴅᴀ ꞅocᴀl, both words have one and the same meaning. In the first of these two sentences ᴀon is not emphasised, and should not form one word with ᴅṁíġ. If the word ᴀṁáin follow in the sentence it sometimes takes the emphasis off ᴀon. ᴀon was in the 16th century, and is in modern times, often written éᴀn, and in compounds ᴀoin becomes éin. An objection to these forms is this, that frequently in poetry ᴀon has to be pronounced ᴀoin (with broad n), which is a recognised sound of ᴀo in Con. and U., but the spelling éᴀn does not lend itself to that sound; in sense of any, with or without neg. it may be used with plural nouns; ní'l ꞅmᴀċᴄ ᴀṛ ᴀon ꞇᴀṛṛúnᴀiḃ ᴀgᴀm-ꞅᴀ, I have not authority over any boys; indef. prn. anyone, one; ꞇᴀn ᴀ. im' ċóṁᴀiṛ, no one being with me.
